

Spawned from the ashes of a capella ruin, this ukulele duo has risen like some kind of vicious, firey bird to ravage the musical landscape with sweet harmonies and brilliant, albeit sometimes caustic, lyrics.

"lemon juju represents the culmination of a lifetime of bitter observation and uncomfortable personal revelation," says Ms. Cynsa Bonorris, one half of the dynamic duo, "I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the wretched, soul-sucking boyfriends of my past, without whose neglect and machinations this outburst of creativity would not be possible." Ms. Alyn Kelley, co-juju, was quick to add, "We'd also like to thank all the sweet, wonderful boys of our past, although, uh, I guess we didn't write any songs about them."

lemon juju has performed to the crazed delight of audiences in the Bay Area at such venues as the Bazaar Café and the Sacred Grounds in San Francisco, and the Nameless in Oakland. Their song, "George Bush, Bad Man" has recently been getting airtime on KPFA.

What people are saying about lemon juju:

"Who knew such trenchant observations and hilarious situations could be rendered so musically irresistible with UKULELES? Great singing, too."

- David Gans, KPFA

"I love lemon juju, their songs are smart, pungent and hilarious. Their singing is gorgeous. We must all worship lemon juju, it will be good for us."

- Cynthia Heimel, Author "Sex Tips for Girls"

"They could probably kick your ass."

- Brady Lea, Playwright